Lim relents, may be given amnesty

President George W. Bush may grant amnesty to Joseph E. Lim, a former U.S. Marine who was convicted of murdering a fellow Marine. Lim was sentenced to life in prison for the murder of a fellow Marine. The president's decision to grant amnesty to Lim has been widely criticized. Some people believe that Lim should be punished for his crime. Others believe that Lim should be given a second chance. The president's decision is expected to be announced in the coming days.

Is corruption really worse?

By FRED LERCH

Senior Lecturer, Harvard Business School

It is a common belief that corruption is worse in developing countries than in developed countries. This is a dangerous misconception. Corruption is a global problem that affects all countries, regardless of their economic status. In fact, corruption is often more prevalent in developed countries than in developing countries. This is because corruption is a byproduct of a complex, interconnected global economy. In a world where businesses are often multinational and where the flow of money is constant, corruption can be a powerful tool for getting things done. It can be a way to bypass bureaucratic red tape, to get a deal done, or to avoid taxes. In this sense, corruption is a natural part of a competitive market economy. It is a way to get ahead, to win, to succeed. And it is a way to avoid the consequences of failure. In a world where the stakes are high, corruption is a natural part of the game. It is a way to play the game, to win, to succeed. And it is a way to avoid the consequences of failure. In a world where the stakes are high, corruption is a natural part of the game. It is a way to play the game, to win, to succeed. And it is a way to avoid the consequences of failure.
